Recipes from Maryland's best Restaurants

This, along with "A Taste of Maryland History, a Guide to Historic Restaurants" repeated each other so, if you are interested, buy one of the two. Both are good choices. I still wish I was there!

Love this. I discovered that through the years I've eaten at most of these restaurants. Many wonderful memories for me.

As a Maryland resident, I've eaten at many of the restaurants included in the book. There are some great seafood dishes and for me, many memories as well.

This is a nice book for those who love restaurants and their history and some good recipes too. Most of these restaurants are still in business and even those that are gone are interesting to read about and see and try their recipes. There is a general map of Maryland in the beginning which will give you a typical idea of where each restaurant is located. They range from Ocean City in the east to Grantsville and Oakland in the west. 50 restaurants are detailed and usually at least 2 recipes are given. Each restaurant has a black and white line drawing, address, serving times and phone numbers. Of course it is always wise to call or look them up on the internet. The stories about each place are interesting and as for the recipes, many are not that complicated. It was lovely to see one of the restaurants that we still mourn its closing- Haussner's in Baltimore, but I was so pleased to see 2 of my favorite dishes given as recipes...sauerbraten and strawberry pie. No one that ate there will ever forget that. That recipe is not the easiest but it is certainly worth a try. We have enjoyed several recipes in here; Bushwaller's shrimp, lobster and crab sautÃ©, Mrs. K's Toll house's macaroon pie and the Pasadena Inn's focaccia.
