Alfred Mill is a self-professed economics buff and experienced professor on the subject. He began his career as a graduate TA and has since gone on to teach courses ranging from the principles of economics to in-depth theoretical discourses on economic policy and political rhetoric. He lives in the Pacific Northwest with his family.

great companion work

Alfred did a fine job writing this book.

I get it 5 stars because it explained concepts and financial jargon in what I believe to be as simple as it'll get, without substantially lowering the level/quality of the material. The author provides great and easy to understand examples & will definitely leave you feeling as though you're ready to take the next step (whatever that may be). Definitely recommend to beginners!

Breaks down economics into a fast interesting read

Provides great example and it is written in a clear manner.

Great

As a part of the description, it is definitely a crash course. I still use this book to help me do the research that I need to do and to revise my own research when and if need be.

This book is needed by anyone interested in an in-depth understanding of economics
