Laya Steinberg, author of two other award-winning picture books, teaches art and design to high school students, tends a community garden, and works in her basement pottery studio. She lives near Boston, Massachusetts, with family. Colleen Madden has illustrated many children's books. When she's not drawing and daydreaming, she's out chasing chipmunks on a trail, learning how to make socks, and eating lots and lots of sushi. She lives near Philadelphia.

Winter is around the corner and before the frost comes Jared has volunteered to help pick pumpkins. The more he finds the more the local soup kitchen will receive. By helping the soup kitchen, Jared learned they will be taking part in tikkun olam, which is repairing the world. Jared's experience was that he donated his idea of a perfect pumpkin for decoration, a small one for soup and a mushy one would be perfect for compost. He managed to salvage some seeds from it. Sukkot is the Jewish harvest holiday that commemorates the forty years the Israelites wandered in the desert and lived in temporary shelters. Author Laya Steinberg and illustrator Colleen Madden have created a delightful story full of colorful pictures that will engage children to be mindful of those who have less and to want to help within their own community.
